TRAINING

Competition law and EU ex ante (economic) telecoms regulation – similar but not the same

We will explain how competition law and sector-specific economic regulation are two building blocks in the policy process to achieve and sustain a competitive market that enhances efficiency and consumer welfare.

The session will include coverage of:

- Market power and market failure
- The concept of consumer welfare
- The objectives of competition law and sector-specific telecoms rules
- The alignment of certain key concepts
- How enforcement overlaps are dealt with

Market definition: emerging issues

The European Commission's revised notice on market definition in competition cases entered into force in February 2024. We will explain the general principles and analyse more closely key issues in the telecoms sector.

Antitrust aspects of network co-operation

We will explain through case examples how mobile network sharing, national roaming and fibre co-investment agreements may in certain circumstances raise competition concerns. Although such arrangements are in principle encouraged by the EU's sector-specific telecoms rules, they are still subject to article 101 TFEU on anticompetitive agreements.

Abuses of dominance in the telecoms sector

We will shed light on the abuses of dominance that are particularly relevant in the telecoms sector, and the possible impact of ex ante sector-specific regulation on their assessment. We will focus on the case law on refusal to supply and margin squeeze infringements, also considering the Commission's pending review of its policy for exclusionary abuses.

Parallel retail price increases: cartel or not?

Parallel pricing may be used as evidence of a cartel under article 101 TFEU in some circumstances, but it could also simply result from market characteristics (including sector-specific regulation). We will analyse this issue through case examples from the retail mobile market.

Merger control in telecoms

Following an overview of EU merger control rules, we will look at the competitive assessment of mergers in the telecoms sector through case law examples. We will pay particular attention to mobile mergers, which have been at the centre of the debate over merger assessment in oligopolistic markets.
