We are recruiting a talented individual who must have previous experience in telecommunications regulation to work in our Brussels office on a full-time basis.

Your responsibilities will include:

- closely monitoring and reporting on regulatory developments affecting the telecommunications sector at European Union and national levels (Western and Eastern Europe)
- contributing your expert knowledge of telecommunications regulation to Cullen International's regular reports and client research
- building close working relationships with clients and industry experts
- answering enquiries from clients in industry and regulatory authorities
- taking part in studies

You:

- must have a minimum of two years experience of working in a professional role in telecommunications regulation
- have a university degree, preferably in law or economics, with a strong background and interest in policy development affecting the telecommunications sector
- have strong analytical skills, with the ability to work within strict deadlines
- have good writing skills – you write clearly and concisely
- speak clearly and to the point about technical and complex issues
- have good interpersonal skills
- are fluent in English (both written and spoken)
- are hardworking, professional and have a potential to work independently and to drive projects

What we offer you in return:

- the opportunity to work at the forefront of regulation as part of one of the best regulatory teams in the industry
- an attractive remuneration package and the freedom of flexible working arrangements
- a rewarding and challenging multi-cultural environment in which to work
- the chance to increase your knowledge in all areas of communications regulation
- a history of corporate stability and continued growth that has created the possibility of long-term careers for our employees
- a real opportunity for personal progress through hard work, training and support
