ABUSE OF DOMINANCE IN THE TELECOMS SECTOR

The EU regulatory framework for electronic communications has adopted the competition law dominance doctrine (article 102 of the TFEU) in its application of market analysis.

However, the application of competition law and sector-specific regulation through market analyses remain separate.

We will explore the common concepts that are shared by competition law and ex ante telecoms regulation and highlight the differences. The application of these concepts is illustrated by using practical case examples.

We will also shed light on the abuses that are particularly relevant in the telecoms sector, and the possible impact of ex ante sector-specific regulation on their assessment, including:

- pricing abuses (predatory pricing, margin squeeze); and
- non-price abuses (rebates, other exclusionary arrangements).

ANTICOMPETITIVE AGREEMENTS IN THE TELECOMS SECTOR

We will also present recent article 101 TFEU cases, with an overview of how network sharing and national roaming agreements are viewed from a competition law perspective.

MERGER CONTROL IN THE TELECOMS SECTOR

During the past few years, EU member states have witnessed significant telecoms merger activity, both in terms of horizontal (e.g. mobile-mobile) mergers, motivated by scale efficiencies, and cross-network (e.g. fixed-mobile) consolidation, responding to growing consumer demand for service bundles. In addition, conglomerate mergers with media companies have become an important trend.

We will analyse how the European Commission and national competition authorities have reviewed these concentrations, with particular focus on the conditions (commitments) required to obtain a clearance decision.
